Wildlife filmmaker Simon King opens world-leading wildlife tracking equipment facility in Wareham

On Thursday 5th May the UK's largest Wildlife tracking equipment manufacturer - Biotrack Ltd - hosted a Grand Opening and tours of their new facility located in the former Wareham law courts.

The fully refurbished building was officially opened by wildlife filmmaker Simon King, in the presence of Michael Tomlinson MP (mid Dorset and North Poole), Mayor Dina Atkins, councillors, the architects, suppliers, customers and staff.

Wildlife film-maker Simon King kindly prepared a speech for the occasion and concluded "it is an honour to be here today and take part in today's just celebrations of the development of the company and everything that you do".

Michael Tomlinson MP said, "I was delighted to attend the Grand Opening of Biotrack, it is really exciting to have an international business of this nature in Wareham, providing employment and business opportunities in Dorset and beyond."

Brian Cresswell, Biotrack Managing Director said, "We now offer a vast array of tracking devices, with continuous technological development. Biotrack is proud to be a UK manufacturer and exporter developing cutting- edge equipment that contributes to the understanding and conservation of the natural world".

Jim Lotimer, CEO of Lotek (Biotrack's parent company) flew in from Canada, and addressing the guests he announced that Biotrack now has customers in 110 countries, and has designed and manufactured tracking tags for over 1,000 wildlife species. "Your partners world-wide send their warmest congratulations, we're really, really proud".
